ELECTRIFIED SUBURBAN TRAINS

Following is a brief description of the new suburban electric trains that are now in operation between Hoboken and Montclair and South Orange.

The motor cars weigh 148,000 pounds, trailers 113,000 pounds each. The unit seating capacity ranges from 162 to 166 passengers. The motors are equipped with gear silencers and the air compressors and dynamotors mounted on rubber-cushion supports to avoid vibration of the car bodies. The control cabs are located on each end of each two-car unit and so arranged that motormen can perform their duties without taking their eyes off of the track. The safety of all concerned has been the first thought. When motormen apply the power, it will be automatically fed to the motors gradually. When the electro-pneumatic brakes are applied the wheel pressure increases automatically. This means smooth handling. If a motorman, for any reason, releases his hold on the controller while his train is in motion, the power automatically cuts off, the brakes automatically applied and the train stopped. This means safe operation. A four-toned, air-operated, signal horn—penetrating and pleasing, but not shrill, is used, the sound being deflected both forwards and to the rear. The heat is thermostatically controlled and evenly distributed. Corona enclosed bowls with Mazda globes, providing a broad diffusion of light. The new cars will have about 20% more light than the present cars.

Electrified train service between Hoboken and Morristown begins the latter part of November, and Dover, Bernardsville and Gladstone in December.

The suburban New Jersey electrification project covers 70 miles of road, carrying 160 miles of track.
